

How to Distribute Results

When you use Qosium Scope, you typically monitor results locally and store the results to a local file. However, when you want to store results, for example, to a remote database, you can set the results to be distributed to other locations in real-time.

Table of Contents

